In some examples, an implantable device is provided which delivers the active agent to the targeted site. After device delivery, the active agent may be released locally in a sustained release manner to provide sustained release of the active agent at the targeted site, or it may release the active agent and dissolve into the body to provide immediate release of the active agent at the targeted site. For example, U.S. Patent Publication No. 2007/0118835 discloses an implantable device for local delivery of an active agent to a vascular site. However, implantable devices can be difficult to manufacture, and they may include complex geometry and/or difficult to manufacture structures that can result in difficult manufacturing processes that increase manufacturing costs.

DNA methylation of tumor protein 53 inhibits DNA-dependent protein kinase-dependent poly-ADP-ribosylation. An interaction between DNA-dependent protein kinase (DNA-PK) and tumor protein p53 (TP53) has been demonstrated in a variety of human tumour cell lines and murine fibroblasts. DNA-PK is responsible for both p53 phosphorylation at serine 15 in response to DNA damage and subsequent down-regulation of p53 protein and for p53 poly-ADP-ribosylation (PARylation) at glutamate 313. Here, we investigated whether DNA-PK-dependent PARylation regulates TP53 function. We show that DNA-PK is present in the TP53 complex and that
