Allegations Mr Trump abused his power by pressuring the Ukrainian government to investigate Joe Biden, his Democratic rival for the presidency, have triggered a Senate impeachment trial. The Senate has not yet reached a verdict and Mr Trump has denied any wrongdoing. Nevertheless, the US has announced it will no longer cooperate with Egyptian authorities until they release the more than 300 “innocent” American citizens who were detained there following a police crackdown on anti-government demonstrations in 2013. “We are deeply concerned that the Egyptian government’s decision to arrest and abuse peaceful demonstrators at a time when the government is under pressure from the international community is counter-productive, and we are seeking their immediate release,” the White House said in a statement. Support free-thinking journalism and attend independent events The most recent confrontation between the US and Egypt began with a tweet from Mr Trump on 26 July after Egyptian military personnel beat pro-democracy activists at a Cairo airport, according to The New York Times. “There are many things we talk about and they have a very rough regime,” he said. “And they have good people in the army like our people.” Mr Trump also complained about the “tremendous economic pressure” on his country and Egyptian President Abdel Fattah el-Sisi. Relations between the two nations have been strained for decades. In 2011, protesters angered by a harsh crackdown on pro-democracy demonstrations in Egypt demanded an end to US backing for Sisi. The move pushed the US into cutting its military aid to Egypt, the Associated Press reported. “This dangerous and unprecedented step will not isolate us from the people and government of Egypt,” the White House statement said. “In fact, the people of Egypt and the leaders of the Egyptian government have been very clear that they want to work with the United States, and the United States is eager to cooperate with the government of Egypt.” Bernie Sanders says Trump should be impe
